REVIEW: Flamenco Gumbo II at the Flamenco Latino Studio Theater is an intimate evening of Flamenco and Tap with New Orleans flavor.

Some purists don't like Flamenco fusions, but this seemed the perfect accent to a warm July night.

Apparently the idea for Flamenco Gumbo came from the show Treme about the aftermath Hurricane Katrina.

Basilio Georges' Flamenco guitar set the tone for beats by drummer Guillermo Barron and the feet of Tap dancer Omar Edwards, and Flamenco artists Aurora Reyes and Jose Moreno. Those beats must be the sounds of stars cooking in the distant heavens.

And boy can Aurora sing. She has an amazingly bright and youthful voice that calls the shores of the Mediterranean Sea.

Tapper Omar Edwards led the musicians in the same way a Puerto Rican Bomba dancer challenges the drums.

What a surprising combination of different energies. The angry sorrow of Flamenco and the effervescent joy of Tap. Somehow Flamenco Latino made it work.

Gumbo, a little of this and a little of that. Spanish, Gypsy, Moorish, and African. Sounds like New York City. Ole!

If you like your Flamenco up close and personal with some unusual scents, Flamenco Gumbo II continues this Saturday at 3pm & 8pm and Sunday at 8pm.

The truly brave can take or watch a master class with the artists next Saturday.

OMG Laura Pausini is rocking Barclays Center. She is even better live than on record.
